DR. WILLIAM J. DEEGAN
Professor of English

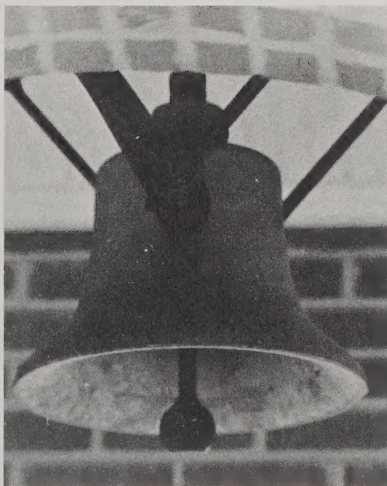

What is a scholar? A scholar is an individual who is dedicated to the advancement of his own knowledge in certain specific areas. And he is one who is generally considered out of contact with the reality of the temporal world. Lost in the cocoon of his sheltered academic atmosphere, he is often ignorant of the practical applications of his esoteric observations. What is a teacher? A teacher is conversely engaged in the imparting of knowledge to the uneducated mind. In many cases, an educator is so engrossed in the communication of ideas and facts to others that he fails to continue in his own growth and learning. What is the ideal synthesis of these two? An intellect which is quick, an interest in the dissemination as well as collection of knowledge, the ability to stimulate natural curiosity, the ultimate aim of increasing a student's perception, enabling him to associate learning with reality. A man, who although a scholar first, still remains above all a teacher. Such an individual is a member of our faculty, one who is caught in the untenable position of straddling the centuries. A part of him refuses to accept anything which is modern—meaning anything occurring after the close of the eighteenth century—and a part of him inevitably draws a comparison between modern television heroes and the figures of the past. He believes in the existence of Druids, and often thinks in Old English, and yet he is as aware of the problems of today's changing world as any enlightened person can be. He is dedicated to the stretching of the intellect, and furthers his aim through mutual discussion with his students both in and out of class. His sense of humor is representative of his intellect, his friendliness, of his nature. He is an advisor, an educator, a friend, and it is for this combination of attributes that we dedicate the 1966 Rawenoch to the original beloved old Druid, Dr. William J. Deegan.

They come walking in double time with a thirst unquenchable, feeling so ignorant in this world of intellectuals. They meet one another with an anxious handshake, a wide smile enticing friendship. They fill closets in anticipation of the weather, but they close their doors on a place called home, knowing nothing of the forecast for the future. They go through the process of registration and are told that they are matriculated students of the college, and still they are apart. Shaking steps, faltering conversations, dinner groups that fuse and split; it's a frightening new world they're a part of, and it's full of crazy bells that seem to regulate their lives. They want so to belong, and then their alarm, too, goes off at eight, and they bump together in the post office at ten, and hunger strikes unanimously at five. Welcome to the family.

It's a spontaneous time of jack-in-the-box freshmen, popping heads in and out of doorways. New experiences, new surroundings; the campus is heady with the enthusiastic, resilient spirit of the newcomer. Their spirit is indefatigable. They explore the campus in an hour but they are unsatisfied. There must be more.

They find an extension of the campus in the people. They discover that there is joy in solitude as well as companionship; they learn about the traditions that make our college what it is. There are personal triumphs, there are group experiences. And there is also the return of the old, as friendships are renewed, and the freshmen are viewed with curiosity.

Fall is a time of practice, a period of preparation. Slowly, as the falling leaves become fewer, all are combined in a swift stream of activity—the only thing needed is a final sense of direction.

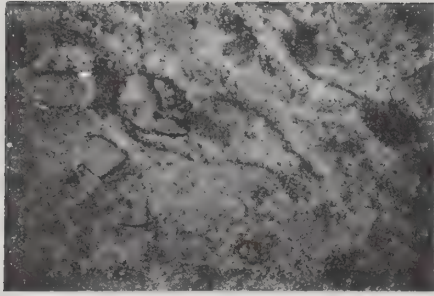

People competed with the weather to see who could be more unpredictable. Girls exchanged poor boys for charlie-horses; guys forfeited their masculinity; and students and administration alike pulled together to transform a rope into a mud bath.

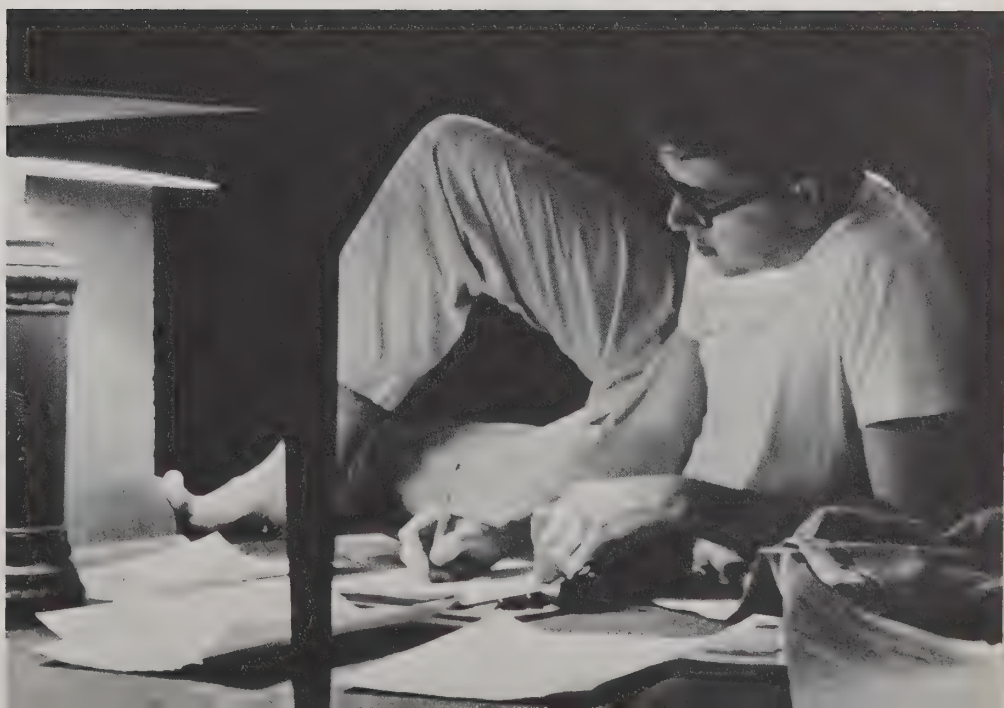

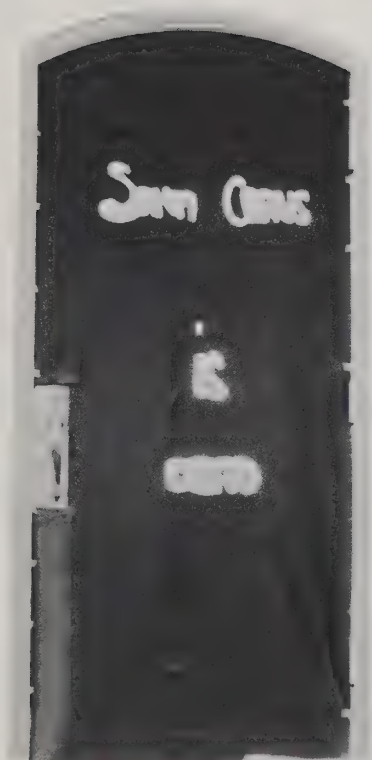

Even the campus sidewalks look a little grim in early winter; they match the color of the skies most days and the sun fights a losing battle. Brown lawns are alternately muddy and hard, but still brown and the barren trees wait only for the wind. Conversations outdoors are short and brisk; it's too cold to linger. Inside there are fireplaces and warmth for human companionship against the outside cold. "Cincinnati Kids" deal in the "Cave" or fall off beds in the dorms, the Hap-Kido enthusiasts fly again, but in spite of it winter deepens.

Some escape by going back into the books, or writing earth-shaking messages for the world. No matter what they do, the heartbeat of Roanoke stops. Faces pass like the wind and the tomorrows are just left-over yesterdays. If tears fall they are silent, and if there is laughter, its music somehow sounds forced, off-tone, hollow. The pace before exams—these two weeks stretch to eternity.

But just as the balmy days of spring open windows and change wool to cotton, so did the long-delayed snow dig at the frozen spirits, prying at the hardened concrete of indifference, and liberating all that was youthful and uninhibited within us. Despite protests to the contrary, when the first white flakes started falling, faces were pressed to the windows, mufflers and mittens were donned, and trays were taken from the Commons. And the snow continued to fall, levelling the paths and bushes, blanketing the campus in wintry white. Such was the beauty of the snow, and more snow . . . and more . . .

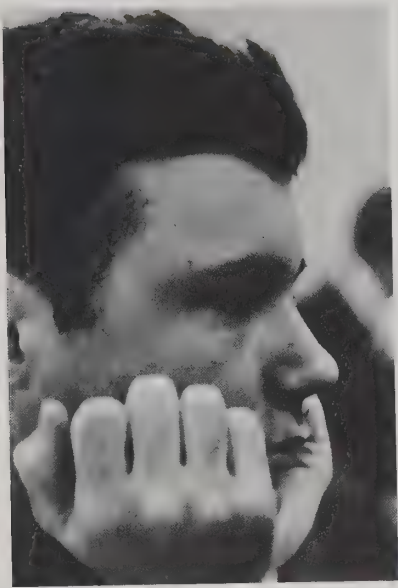

Is it spring or an oasis in wintertime? The ground beneath the trees is dry and warm, the first crocus warily blooms, and the day becomes longer than the night.

Logic and botany tell us it is inevitable, but between the expectation and the reality, between the miracle and event, is the period of indecision. Spring stands blushing in the wings, and hesitates to make her appearance.

The last vestiges of snow melt away, hastened by the steady and gentle rain. In between showers, there is confusion—the old is making way for the new, and no one knows quite how to think or behave. Spring is in the air, but so are a few remaining chilly winds.

The indomitable spirit of the students wins out, and spring is officially heralded in, despite winter's feeble attempts to assert his lost authority.

The curtain rises, the audience is ready, and spring is forced to acknowledge her presence. People ramble, half-bouncing, across the budding campus, contemplating the dreariness of classes, thinking only of the afternoon—a walk through the trees, a gathering at Billy's or Amo's, perhaps a quiet conversation with a friend in the sunlight. An epidemic of spring fever envelops the campus; closed textbooks sit gathering dust on unused desks, professors preside resignedly over bare classrooms. Academic buildings are not alone in their emptiness; the dormitory rooms, with their televisions and stereos, no longer hold the attraction they did during the long winter months. Spring evokes a rejuvenation of spirit, new energy, and an abounding sense of freedom. Rules are ignored; talking out of windows or walking across the grass are seen with hastily closed eyes. Individuals are drawn into couples, existing couples are drawn closer together. May weekend, elections, trips to Nassau, mountain parties—all are in smiling submission to the essence of spring.

As the seasons move swiftly through their cycle, merging one with the other, so do the students progress through the year. No longer is anyone new—each freshman is as much an integral part of the spirit of Roanoke as the oldest five-year man. Faces and attitudes mature; the give-and-take of relationships is learned and understood. There has been mutual discussion between student and professor; there has been acceptance of the once unaccepted. Plans are made for the near and distant future; memories are impressed, indelibly. Remembered are the sometimes attended assemblies, the long afternoon labs, the responsibilities, and the intermittent studying. More fondly recalled are the deep friendships, the discovery of a special person, the quiet moments stolen in late afternoon. Understanding of the campus has grown, and so has each individual.

And so the year draws to its inevitable close, evoking varied sentiments. The prevailing atmosphere appears to be relief that the year is finally over. And yet, as the end becomes reality, there is a curious deep-seated reluctance to turn away without a backward glance. Many are returning after a summer's relaxation or money-earning. They have pre-registered; they have planned their schedules; they know that they can pick up where they left off in a few short months. And so they leave with laughter and a couldn't-care-less attitude, easily suppressing the sadness that is contrary to their surface emotions.

But for some, this attitude is an impossibility. As graduation day approaches, the finality of departure is impressed upon each senior. There is unexpected and intangible sadness in the air. The prevailing aura of gaiety is carried to an extreme; for if it is relaxed, this curious denial of four years of expressed indifference or disapproval will overcome. Despite the precautions, however, this denial is sustained; graduation is happiness tinged with depression, pride surmounted by a sense of loss, and satisfaction burdened with emptiness.

Some will return,
others will not—
and each group envies the other.

Peter Gebhard, President

Student Body Officers represent the ideals, desires and suggestions of the campus population. They attempt to foster a working relationship among the students, faculty and administration. Periodic assemblies permit exchange of ideas between students, discussion of current problems, and suggestions to strengthen student government.

student body officers

Pam Slate, Secretary; Paul Caldwell, Vice President.

Under the capable supervision of Joseph W. Chicurel this year, the Roanoke College Honor Council served primarily to inculcate the meaning and responsibilities of the Honor Code into the everyday lives of students. Additional responsibilities of the Council include impartial and objective judgment during various trials held throughout the year, and revisions of the Judicial Section of the Constitution.

First Row: Joe Chicurel, President; Billy Bobbitt; Carol Umpleby, Secretary; Doug Hanks. Second Row: Tom Carroll; Tom Miller; Bill Carlile.

Class officers and students holding responsible positions on other governing bodies form the Executive Council. These twelve students represent the student body in attempting to maintain harmonious relations among the faculty, students, and administration. In the event of changes or modifications in existing policies through faculty or these changes to the student body, and these changes to the student body, hopefully, to reconcile differences. Their principal role is in the area of campus communications.

Women's Student Council is composed of an elected president from each dorm, three elected officers, and one representative from each class. Its primary purpose is to help women students develop high standards of living through abiding by the rules and regulations governing them. The Council's secondary purpose, accomplished under the guidance of the Dean of Women, lies in the enforcement of rules for resident women.

Male students having achieved significant recognition in the areas of scholarship and extra-curricular activities are eligible for membership in Blue Key National Honor Society. Membership in this Society is the highest honor available to male students at Roanoke College. Blue Key functions to promote an atmosphere of mutual respect and understanding among the faculty and student body in attempting to establish a basis for knowledgeable communication.

Also established to improve student-faculty relations, Cardinal Key National Honor Society is the highest honor attainable by junior and senior women students at Roanoke College. Membership in Cardinal Key is acquired through outstanding academic achievement and extra-curricular activities. In addition to fostering better relations between the faculty and student body, Cardinal Key recognizes scholarship and leadership as its primary goals.

Roanoke College's weekly newspaper turned fifty this year. If this was a special occasion for The Brackety-Ack, so too was the reign of Pam Moore, Editor-in-Chief, who successfully modernized the format and alternately drove or led her staff to new highs in journalism. Reflecting "Roanoke College Life and Thought," the staff reported the news objectively and accurately and attempted to establish a forum of opinion for the entire campus. It is the goal of the staff of The Brackety-Ack to present issues, noting the obligation and using the opportunity to say something interesting and factual, to stir interest and excitement, and to impart responsible views for all students. These journalists attempt to surmount the mediocre and conventional, to say something that will appeal to the maturity and intelligence of students, faculty, and administrators. These goals, when fully realized, give emphasis to the student voice, which need not feel inadequate or lost in apathy. The Brackety-Ack, as a free newspaper, contributes much to the search for truth so necessary in an institution of higher learning.

At Roanoke, nearly everyone reads the Brackety-Ack!

The Rawenoch is the student publication which has yet to realize a monetary profit on the finished product. Regardless of this, a handful of conscientious students, under the careful supervision and guidance of Editor-in-Chief Karen Percy, found substantial incentive in the pleasure the Rawenoch offers the students to produce a memorable yearbook. Regarded as the single link between college and the future, the Rawenoch records unforgettable as well as forgettable memories of those numerous events, important to some but trivial to others, which have best exemplified life at Roanoke College. At the center of these conscientious students lies the necessary instigator. This instigator, always there and always willing, stimulates rather than decrees ideas, excites interest rather than apathy and offers criticism but frequent reinforcement to combat our failures. A student herself, Mrs. Grace Bosworth will remember this Rawenoch above all others, for she is a senior and looks to June with much anticipation. Because she is a friend, if not a peer, and indispensable to the staff, we take this opportunity to express our most sincere feelings of gratitude and devotion. Special recognition also goes to Tom Miller, George Ingram, Carr Steele, Judy Cloaninger, Edie Forsyth, Ann Houck, Anita Huffman and Marsha Felton, for their varied but nevertheless indispensable duties as staff members.

This winter the Roanoke College choir went on a tour—the first in many years. The addition of new voices greatly added not only to the size, but also to the quality of the choir. During the spring the choir helped to put on an enjoyable musical “The H.M.S. Pinafore,” quite a sizeable accomplishment in itself. Special recognition should be given to Mr. Williams the director, Mrs. Finfgeld the accompanist, and Ron Leiser who served as Choir President.

The Expression, the campus literary magazine, is sponsored by the Goodwin Society. The purpose of the magazine is to publish a composite of student ideas. This composite yields prose, poetry and satire, the inspirations of both humorous and serious students. This year the staff published two issues of the Expression, the first, a satirical analysis of the campus, the second, a composite of the thoughts and emotions of various students expressed by the written word as well as by art.

Functioning as a representative organ of communication, the Panhellenic Council strives to alleviate inter-sorority conflicts and to establish a concrete basis for harmony in the various phases of Greek life. Comprised of 12 Greek women, the Council has sponsored a benefit ski movie for a cancer-stricken child, the fall Panhellenic Tea, Rush, an installation banquet in the spring, and for the first time, sent delegates to the Panhellenic Convention in Williamsburg.

Jim Miller and Andy Rossell team up on Mt. St. Mary's.

Smith kicks for a goal.

Coach Moson's soccer squad posted a respectable 3-4-3 record in spite of numerous injuries to many of the key players. Chuck Bittle and Russ Forman, co-captains for the second year, Jeff Seubel and Bob Barnes played fine soccer until they were hit by injuries.

The highlight of the year was the defeat of Baltimore University, a perennial national soccer power, by a score of 2 to 1. After scoring two quick goals, the Maroons hung on to play a tremendous defensive game to save the win.

Freshman Jeff Willis was outstanding in the goal cage as he turned back 186 shots, earning him an All-American Southern selection. Aiding Willis with the defensive were Forman, Mike Brooks, and Jeff Seubel who were All-Mason-Dixon second team performers.

Others who performed well on defense were Craig Rowley and Whit Bernard, a freshman who had never played soccer before coming to Roanoke. The offensive was led by Jim Miller and Jeff Archer, freshmen who scored ten of the team's fifteen goals. Other offensive players were Mike Brooks, John Markham, and Dick Virkstis.

With everyone but Forman and Bittle expected back for next year, the soccer outlook is bright for Coach Moson and his charges. For the record, this season marked the fourth year both Bittle and Forman started every game.

At the conclusion of an 11-9 season, Coach Hackman reflected that it was one of the better teams that he had coached in his long career. He felt, however, that a better record could have been achieved if the number of ball turnovers had been held to a minimum.

All five starters averaged in double figures, indicating fine balance. Sophomore Jim Boon was high with 19 points per game average followed by Butch Prillaman with 17.3, John Mongero 16.6, Bob Carney 14.7 and Ron Mock with 13.3. Freshman Mike Sullivan along with Wayne Barnheart, Albert Prillaman and Barry Flora proved to be capable reserves.

The season's highpoint was reached just before Christmas vacation as the team went over the century mark for the fourth consecutive time. These games were characterized by Prillaman and Mock clearing the boards and passing off to Bob Carney who would lead a sparkling fast break. The team, however, appeared to lose its snappiness following the three-week break and never really attained the pre-Christmas form.

Two precedents were set by the squad. The first was scoring 115 points vs. Bridgewater to set a new school scoring record. The second was the defeat handed to Catholic University on their home court.

The team will lose three fine ball players due to graduation.

They are: Captain Bob Carney, Center Butch Prillaman, and Forward Ron Mock. These men will be difficult to replace but players such as Mongero, Boon, Sullivan, and others, should be able to continue Roanoke's winning tradition.

In its second year at Roanoke College, Coach Mosen's lacrosse team anticipates a successful season. Co-captained by Terry Smith and Charlie Cipolla, the squad boasts experienced and talented upperclassmen and is supported strongly by promising freshmen. Mosen feels the spirit and enthusiasm of the team is very strong and will prove to be advantageous throughout the season.

The team's prime hope in upperclassmen lies mainly with Kim Bramley, who is expected to control team play. Bill Carlile, Ron Voss, and Gary Trageser, midfield men, are noted for their agility and stick handling ability and should contribute heavily to the team's success. The defense will be spearheaded by the efforts of Jon Chase and Dan Stone, two experienced and steady performers. Don Pyles, a transfer student, shows strong promise. Dexter Goodwin, Terry Purvis, Bob Callaghan and Roy Henwood are freshmen who should prove to be capable reserves. With a strong nucleus and a willingness to work hard, R. C.'s lacrosse outlook is bright in spite of the rugged schedule ahead of them.

For the third consecutive year Sigma Chi and the Men's Independents Club have waged a battle for the overall intramural lead. The other fraternities and the Dormitory teams have done well in individual sports but have not been able to match the overall strength exhibited by the Sigs and the MICS. Bob Barnes, winning for the second year in a row, paced the Sigs to victory in the Cross-Country meet. The K.A.'s were close behind in second place followed by the MICS and the Pi Kaps. Following Barnes to the finish were Mike Ainsley, K.A.; John Mongero, MIC; Bill Carlile, K.A.; and Rich Mellor, Sig.

Speedball was the first team sport of the year and was easily won by the Independents as they were paced by the outstanding play of Dan Monk and John Mongero. The Sigs, led by the offensive play of Tom Mercaldo and the defensive play of Bill Tucker captured second place followed by the Pi Kaps and the K.A.'s. Basketball has proved to be the most hotly contested sport of the year as any of the four teams were capable of winning. The Sigs, however, prevailed as they edged the Independents by two points in the championship game. Bowman finished third as the Pi Kaps and the K.A.'s tied for fourth place. The championship game must be singled out as the game of the year as the lead changed many times with neither team ever holding more than a three-point lead at any one time. Nick Fairbanks of the Pi Kaps and Bob Barnes of the Sigs were chosen as the year's most outstanding players. Others mentioned for their fine play were Wayne Ohlandt of the Sigs, who was the league's high scorer, Rick Jones of the MICS, John Stahl of Bowman, and Dennis Pennington of the Pi Kaps.

The Independents, losing only one game, dominated handball as they were paced by Nick Smith, Tom Beer, and Bob Carney. Tied for second place were the Pi Kaps and the Sigs. Bowman finished in fourth place.

In 1882 Edison had a great idea.

And it wasn't the electric light.

The whole idea of investor-ownership of electric light and power companies began when Thomas A. Edison and a group of investors financed his first power plant more than 80 years ago.

Since then, investor-owned companies like ours have become an integral part of America's Free Enterprise system. That explains why today we have at our fingertips more electric power than any other country in the world.

And it's this same Free Enterprise system that puts at your fingertips greater opportunity, greater expectation for success than can be hoped for by any other young people in the world.
